Topic/ Literacy	Fenland ghost story Before the Fens were drained, the expanses of misty swamps and meres were dangerous, especially at night and when there was no moon. It was said that evil creatures lived in the marshes and bogs waiting to lure the unwary to their deaths: boggarts, bogles, willo-the-wisps with their dancing lights and the dead hand which would emerge from the water and pull a man to his death. Many were lost in the dark fen and never seen again.  1) Listen to the story 'Long Tom', a traditional fenland warning story about the night-time dangers of the Fens in the days before the land was drained. 2) Traditional stories like 'Long Tom' would have been passed down generations by word of mouth. Listen to the recording once more, then challenge yourself to retell the story to someone at home or to one of your friends or family over the phone. Check with an adult before telling the story to someone younger than you, as they might find it a little scary! Extension challenge: design your own 'safe keep' using the Safe Keep activity sheet.	none required
